After a long and checkered career, Castle arden is now about to enter upon the period it agreatest usefulness. It has been a fort, a musement hall, and a dopot of immigration. Now it is to be an aquarium where thou ands of people from far and near will water hall and the same forms, monstrous and beautiful, disporting themselves in surroundings the their native haunts. liminary plans, which were approved and sent to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. The Legislature passed a bill permitting $150.000 to be used for an aquarium, and all that is necessary is for the Board of Estimate and Apportionment to order the issuing of the bonds. Some time ago President Dana of the Park Board asked Mr. Munckwitz to look at Castle Garden and give his idea of its fitness for an aquarium. Mr. Munckwitz found that, had the city intended constructing a new building, it could not have adopted better plans than those upon which the Garden was built. The heavy circular stone walls give solidity and the greatest possible floor space. The circular form is broken on the inside into a series of straight walls, joining at a very obtuse angle. This allows the tanks to be arranged in straight rows without wasting any floor.

Garden is divided into sections gives especial advantages for the peculiar lighting necessary for an aquarium. Mr. Munekwitz found that $25,000 or $30,000 would be necessary to put the building in repair, to lay an asphalt floor, to put on a new roof, to touch up the stonework at the joints, and to alter the smaller rooms that lead off from the big room, which is now an empty expanse of immense floor space, with a circle of iron pillars supporting the roof.

Mr. Munekwitz's plans provide for the building of a gallery which shall run clear around the inside of the building, thus doubling the space. Furthermore, the way the roof of the | and many other fish of the large and dangerous

There will be about 150 of these tanks in all, perhaps more than that, and each tank will be separated from the next by a brick partition.

"The moment the door swung back on its hinges." Mr. Burnham says in Forest and Stream, "a cold blast of air swent out. The room was filled to within a lew feet of the cellings with boxes and barrels securely closed. Around the sides were ranged perpendicularly metal cylinders containing the freezing mixture and coated with an inch of hoar frost. The atmosphere was pervaded with a faint, suggestive ofor, and was cold as death itself. The party was provided with candles, and fortunately so, for Mr. Flace withdrew with his lantern. He was about to close the outside door on those present in the interest of the Game law when Brown observed him and hastily directed Campbell to prevent the mancuvre. The thought of being locked up in the dark vaults of the warehouse and slowly congealed was not very pleasant, and after that Roundsman Campbell kept guard at the door while the two others continued the search.

"Protecter Brown had the numbers of the several packages that he knew to contain game, but it was no easy job to find them. Pluel up in a room about 12x20 feet were lundreds of boxes and barrels of all shapes and sizes, as well as lampers, frozen joints of beef and large fish, stiff as so much wood. A box was found, bearing one of Protector Brown's significant numbers. Roundsman Campbell secured a hatchet and in a jiffy the box was opened. Half a hundred large game birds fell out, which were identified as prairie chickens. Room 7 was next examined and yielded a plentiful return. Box 618, marked very plainly "50 pounds Philadelphia Broilers," by some strange process of transmutation was found to contain 122 quall. Box 508 added the mute evidence of 96 more Bob Whites.

"These birds were all frozen stiff. They had evidently been packed when still warm, and as each box was opened came out in one solid mass like a mould of frozen cream. When they were confiscated, including 717 quall, 173 ruffed groups. It was useless to stand on the top of the box to try to pack them. There was no give to their froz the second floor.

Ex-Senator Ecclesine, her counsel, appealed to Judge Cowing for extreme elemency. Miss Flynn, he sald, was only 22 years old, and had nover before been charged with any offence. She was employed as keeper of the linen room at the instance of Mrs. McIntyre, the house-keeper. Mrs. McIntyre was discharged, as ing he considered the law unconstitutional. Miss Flynn believed, unjustly. Miss Flynn, in the finally conducted the party to room 6 on the enthusiasm of friendship, foolishly resented her friend's discharge, and determined to give up her place. In a moment of femining hinges," Mr. Burnham says in Forest and spite she put some of the linen in her trunk and locked the trunk. Then she went to the ing she hurried to the Holland House, asked for a private interview with Mr. Gustave Bauman, one of the proprietors, told him what she had done, and gave him the key of her trunk. Mr. Bauman thereupon called in a policeman and had her arrested.

Mr. Ecclesine submitted affidavits from residents of Harlem, certifying to the excellent character of Miss Flynn. There were three physicians among those who made affidavits, and Mr. Ecclesine explained that Miss Flynn's hrothers are practising physicians in Harlem. He asked Judge Cowing to suspend sentence. The least penalty under the law would be imprisonment in the penitentiary for two and a half years. Imprisonment even for a day in a penal institution would mean the ruin of Miss Flynn's life.

Judge Cowing asked Mr. Bauman what his views as to punishment were. Mr. Bauman said that he thought Miss Flynn ought to be sent to the penitentiary.

"I this were a young man at the bar, being of excellent character, and being charged with his first offence. I would undoubtedly send him to the Emira Reformatory. Now, wny should I not extend the same clomency to this defendant, simply because she is a woman? The Legislature, at its last session, passed a bill to establish a reformatory for young women—a law that should have existed many years age. The reformatory, however, is not yet in existence, and if i impose any penalty I must, therefore, sentence this young woman, whose character has always been good heretofore, and is clanaed with her first offence, to the penitentiary. I cannot conscientiously do that. I shall, therefore, suspend sentence. You must not understand, Linda Flynn, that suspension of sentence means that you are allowed to go into the world again to steal. If you commit any offence whatever again in this county I shall send for you and sentence you to the penitentiary for five years. You are now discharged."

Miss Flynn tearfully thanked Judge Cowing, and quitted the court room with her counsel.
